NORTH POLE
TRAINING ACADEMY
GORDON

Every year, the North Pole Training Academy where young Scout Elves learn how to climb trees, wrap presents with precision, and observe children with care, hosts a special event called the Snowstorm Summit. Its a celebration of learning, teamwork, and the spirit of being a North Pole Scout Elf.

Scout Elves are what humans call an Elf on the Shelf. They look like dolls but come to life when children are sound asleep.

WELCOME TO THE SNOWSTORM
SUMMIT!
GORDON

Among the newest batch of trainees that year were five elves who stood out not because they were better, but because they each had a gift that didn't quite fit the usual mold.

They weren't rule-breakers.
They just didn't quite fit the shelf.

GORDON

There was Glacia, who loved studying snowflakes and could sense a storm before it even arrived.
Orville, who had a curious way of floating a few feet off the ground sometimes when he got excited!
Snoop-Nog, who carried a joy meter everywhere and always noticed when someone needed cheering up.
Gordon, who moved so fast it was like watching a snowball zip through a candy cane tunnel.
And then there was Jinx, a quiet elf with a playful streak. He wasn't loud or flashy, but he was always nearby when a laugh was needed, or a sled rope needed untangling. He was very shy and sometimes got into little bits of mischief but never anything too serious.

GORDON

As the Snowstorm Summit began, a surprise blizzard swept in stronger and earlier than expected. The lanterns flickered, music paused, and snow piled up across the Training Academy courtyard. Elves couldnt find their teams, cocoa deliveries stalled, and many weren't sure what to do next.

GORDON

While senior elves scrambled, the five quietly started helping in their own ways: Glacia guided groups to shelter using snow patterns and wind readings.
Orville floated up and placed glowing star-lanterns to light the paths.
Snoop-Nog gathered a group of worried younger elves and led them in a round of songs to keep spirits high. Gordon zipped through the Training Academy delivering hot cocoa, dry scarves, and cheerful messages.
Jinx helped wherever he could tying knots, carrying mittens, and tossing little snowballs to make others smile.

They didn't wait for instructions.
They didn't need recognition.
They just saw what needed doing and did it together.

GORON

When the storm cleared and the Summit resumed, the Head of the Academy, Mrs. Sparklewhistle, rang the large sleigh bell to gather everyone together.
These five elves, she said, showed us
what it truly means to serve the season:
not just with skills, but with heart,
quick thinking,and kindness.
Sometimes its not the shelves you sit on, but the spark you carry that matters.
I believe that you elves will spread cheer
and courage across the North Pole and one day, maybe the world.

SNOWSTORM
SUMMIT

What the young elves didn't know was that word of their heroism had already reached the very top, Santa and Mrs. Claus themselves, who had been enjoying a cup of hot cocoa and watching the Snowstorm Summit on their television.

In their cozy cottage tucked beneath the Northern Lights, Santa stroked his beard thoughtfully as he listened to the tale. Courage, cheer, and cleverness when it was needed most, he said. They didn't just act like Scout Elves. They acted like something more. Mrs. Claus smiled warmly as she stirred a peppermint swirl into her hot cocoa. I think it's time they were part of something special. Something elite. And so, Santa made a call to Mrs. Sparklewhistle herself.

That evening, as snowflakes danced gently outside the great hall windows, Mrs. Sparklewhistle stepped back onto the stage and lifted a scroll sealed with Santas candy-striped wax crest.
A message from Santa and Mrs. Claus, she announced, has just arrived. They've heard of your bravery, your teamwork, and your joyful hearts and they are very impressed.
So impressed, in fact, that they've decided you will not be Scout Elves.

The room went silent.
You are hereby invited to become official members of Santas Elite Elf Team known throughout the North Pole as the Jingle 4 including Glacia, Orville, Snoop-Nog, and Gordon with Jinx as their quietly helpful companion and friend who, because of his shyness, chose to remain in the background but whose help never went unnoticed.

The crowd erupted with cheers, snowflake confetti flew,
and hot cocoa mugs clinked in celebration.
Mrs. Sparklewhistle turned with a smile to Jinx.
And you, dear Jinx, are invited to remain as their companion a helper of sorts. You may not want the spotlight, but you've shown us that kindness behind the scenes is every bit as important as heroics out front.

Jinx blushed, tucked his scarf a little higher over his face,
and gave a quiet nod with a small giggle as he sneakily tossed a snowball at Gordons boots.

THE JINGLE 4

SNOOPNOG

From that day on, the Jingle 4 and Jinx became known throughout the North Pole as a team of elves who turned snowy surprises into sparkles of hope and reminded everyone that there are many ways to shine.

And thats how the Jingle 4 and Jinx became part of Christmas.
